The Center for Community Capitalism

The Center for Community Capitalism seeks to create public policies that foster innovative community development partnerships with the private sector to reinvigorate markets, and grow jobs, incomes and wealth in America's underinvested communities. While neither government nor the private sector working alone can revitalize neighborhoods or local economies, there is a renewed sense of hope across the country that business, communities and governments working together can make disadvantaged communities more vital places to live and work.

America cannot remain competitive unless everybody has the tools and skills necessary in the new economy. In community capitalism, business, supported by the government and community sectors, drives investment, job creation, and economic opportunities in underinvested communities. Urban neighborhoods are profiled by measures of economic strength rather than social pathologies; promising inner-city entrepreneurs have access to capital; and corporations make inner-city investment decisions for business reasons instead of charity. In an increasingly competitive global economy, we must take advantage of the enormous untapped potential – both in economic and human terms – that our inner cities contain.

The Center for Community Capitalism is located within the Frank Hawkins Kenan Institute of Private Enterprise at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

The Kenan Institute of Private Enterprise

The Frank Hawkins Institute of Private Enterprise promotes synergy among leaders in business, the academy, and government for the purpose of strengthening the private enterprise system worldwide. It achieves its objectives through research and analysis, education and training, managerial assistance, and information dissemination, as well as through publications, conferences, and workshops. The Kenan Institute is an integral part of the Kenan-Flagler Business School at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Information in this brochure was accurate as of May 15, 1999 and applies only to products offered in North Carolina. All costs, fees, and product descriptions are subject to change without notice. Products offering “no fee for use of foreign ATM” only guarantee that the issuing institution will not charge a fee; the institution operating the foreign ATM may charge a fee.

About this guide . . .

This guide to low-cost financial products available from financial institutions in North Carolina was produced by the Center for Community Capitalism in the Kenan Institute of Private Enterprise at the University of North Carolina, under the direction of Professor Michael A. Stegman. The guide could not have been compiled without the cooperation of the North Carolina Bankers Association, under the direction of Thad Woodard, and the North Carolina Credit Union Network, under the direction of Larry Johnson, and I thank both organizations for their support

This guide is intended for use by all citizens of North Carolina, especially those with lower incomes and those of any income level who are currently without financial services. It was conceived in response to the federal government's transition to the electronic delivery of public benefits, which has tremendous implications for North Carolina consumers and the financial services industry. It is our belief that the revolution in banking technology facilitating this transition provides an opportunity for financial institutions to expand their market reach. It also provides an opportunity for "unbanked" consumers to join the financial mainstream.

The contents of this guide were derived from surveys we sent to 130 banks and 173 credit unions providing account services in North Carolina. We asked survey recipients to identify any checking, savings, or other type of low-cost account services that they believed would be attractive to lower-income individuals. Rather than setting an arbitrary standard, we asked the banks and credit unions themselves to define which of their many products meet their definition of "low-cost". Of the surveys we sent out, we received responses from 71 financial institutions: 51 from banks, and 20 from credit unions. We include in this guide all 147 product descriptions that we received.

Our goal in creating this guide is twofold. We hope to assist lower-income people in finding affordable financial products, and we seek to encourage people who are making the transition from welfare to work in establishing a banking relationship. Toward these ends, we identify for each financial institution a list of the counties in which their low-cost products are available; all 100 counties in North Carolina are represented. To further facilitate use of this guide, we include in the table of contents the pages where particular populations might find products of special interest to them.

Finally, I want to express my appreciation to Lisa Mensah of the Ford Foundation for supporting the Center's work in electronic banking, which made this guide possible, and to Allison Freeman, who directed this project.
